Understanding time period bias

When analysing investment performance we will report across defined time periods – monthly, quarterly, yearly etc. This structure of reporting allows for comparability across LIC/LITs and alternative investment vehicles, including relevant benchmarks. However, focusing solely on a performance data as at a specific point in time can lead to a time period bias in analysis. This is apparent in LIC/LITs more so than other investment funds due to the closed-end nature allowing the investment vehicles to trade at premium or discount to the underlying net asset value. Analysis of the 70 LIC/LITs in this report shows that discounts display seasonal characteristics, widening out in the months leading up to June before tightening into December. Yearly tax-loss selling has been a key driver of this, as well as portfolio rebalancing. In 2019 it was the Federal election that was the main driver for the historical wide mid-year average discounts.

So, why does this all matter? We've seen that drawing a conclusion on the performance of the overall sector as at June 2019 would be misguided, as you would be painting a fairly bleak outlook on the sector. In the next 6 months 30 of 36 domestic mandated LIC/LITs outperformed their relevant benchmark at an average of 7.9%. In a similar way, drawing a conclusion from that short timeframe can lead to imperfect decisions. Performance is reported in a variety of ways, relying solely on fixed date performance figures impairs investor decision-making.

BELL POTTER

Bell Potter's Indicative NTA tracks the 'indicative' movement of a LICs underlying NTA each month by monitoring the percentage movements of the disclosed holdings, and using an index to track the movement of the remaining positions. We have also included an adjusted indicative NTA[^] and adjusted discount[^], which removes the LIC distribution from the ex-dividend date until the receipt of the new NTA post the payment date.
